Reminders of Love

Poppies! The first time I saw poppies growing wild was when I lived in Greece. I had to stop the car, climb over a fence and photograph them. I find them to be stoic, beautiful, and so delicately intricate. The horses around me gathered as I took endless photos. A gorgeous desktop mini.

Hydrangeas speak to many of us as symbols of delicate courage and beauty. They change colour based on the pH of the soil...a moody bloom, indeed. And yet, they always bring such joy to those who grow them. This is famed in a floating frame and wired for hanging. 2 gorgeous desktop minis.

Flash of Adoration

43cm x 43cm | Oil, linen, framed in blackwood

Pomegranates have always been one of my favourite foods. When I painted this work I thought of the heat of the summer. Those lazy hot Sundays when you need a refreshing drink and some fruit. For me this means pomegranates and lime-zested sparkling water. The attention seeking green is a complete show grabber but the drops of orange and hits of deep pink are what make me linger. A gorgeous highly textured painting.
